Childsplay's Tour Festival:
In My Grandmother's Purse and A Little Bit of Water

Tempe, AZ- Childsplay, Arizona's professional theatre for young audiences, offers audiences a chance to see two of its school touring productions, In My Grandmother's Purse and A Little Bit of Water, in the Studio at the Tempe Center for the Arts in June.

These hour-long plays have been performed at schools in gymnasias, cafeterias and libraries across the state as a part of Childsplay's extensive school touring program with all set, costume and prop pieces properly fitted in every square inch of a Childsplay van. In June, the actors of the two productions will park their vans at the Tempe Center for the Arts, to perform for Childsplay's dedicated audiences giving them a chance to see the shows that have been presented to more than 100,000 children across the region.

The Story--The Playwright's Description:

"A young boy and his mother play a game in which each has to remember lists of things they both imagine to be 'in Grandmother's purse.' As they play, the things they imagine seem to suggest two different ideas about Grandma. For the boy, she is an adventuress, a fighter of knights and tigers. For the mother, she is the parent who did not care enough about her family. Grandma's appearance only makes matters worse, as all three try to learn to balance the joy of fantasy with the need to feel safe and secure. The play also addresses the themes of death and memory, where one finds the beauty in them, and what they can mean for a child." -Eric Bass

The Story:

The world-famous master storyteller, Marie, with the help of her two assistants, Liz and Enrique, tells the story, “A Ribbon of Green.” This is the tale of a river in the desert. The three take the audience far back in time to when the river was created through the friendship of the Land, the Wind and the Water. Using puppets, projections and other theatrical magic, the three characters show how life came to the river – first plants, birds and animals, then early native people, followed by pioneers and farmers. Throughout all this, the storytellers show how the river adapted to suit the needs of those who settled along its banks.
