Preview Guide for Parents and Teachers to Childsplay's Production of

This is Not a Pipe Dream

We hope you find this guide helpful in preparing your children for an enjoyable and educational theatrical experience. Included you'll find things to talk about before and after seeing the performance, classroom activities that deal with curriculum connections and education standards, and resource materials.

About the Play:

Young René Magritte is beginning to envision the world not as it is but as it might be. Although his father calls his desire to become an artist "a pipe dream," with his mother's encouragement René follows his vision into the delightful absurdity of the paintings we've come to love. An unorthodox adventure featuring fanciful slapstick and a dash of Keystone Cops, This Is Not A Pipe Dream looks at the life and work of a singular surrealist painter—and at the very nature of art itself.

This might sound a bit abstract for the average five-year-old but do not fear! This is a play which will be enjoyed and appreciated on a number of levels and should provide everyone with plenty of laughs and something to think about afterwards. The youngest of audiences will be amused by the slapstick antics of the cast, by chases and hat tricks, by physical humor and word plays. They will also readily understand the simple story of a boy, encouraged to pursue his interest in art by his mother, but whose father thought art a waste of time, a foolish "pipe dream."

Older audiences will gain a wealth of other insights into Magritte, a painter who preferred to be described as "a thinker who communicates by means of paint," his childhood, his art, and the images which were meaningful to him. They will be introduced to the more serious subjects of reality and illusion, words and their relationship to the objects they describe, and the nature of art and the artistic process.

Arizona Academic Standards:

Your visit to the theater as well as the preparation and follow up activities can involve many content areas from the Arizona Department of Education K-12 Academic Standards. Many of the suggested discussion topics and activities can be tied to standards in several areas. We have included some standard connections that are noted in parenthesis. If you would like a more detailed list of standard connections for your particular grade we would be happy to assist. Simply email Katie McFadzen at kmcfadzen@childsplayaz.org or call 480-350-8105.

Things to Talk About Before the Production

The Artist

René Francois-Ghislin Magritte was born in 1898 in Lessines, Belgium. His family was solidly middle-class: his father, Leopold, was a tailor and textile merchant and his mother, Régina, a milliner. Magritte was the oldest of three brothers. Most accounts of Magritte's cheerless childhood include the fact that he and a playmate enjoyed exploring cemeteries, being particularly fascinated by burial vaults, which they opened and investigated. This experience would prove a great influence upon his later artwork, as wooden caskets and granite tombstones recur in many of his paintings. René's mother encouraged his artistic pursuits, while her husband was clearly disapproving. He first took drawing lessons at the age of 12. His mother committed suicide in a nearby river when he was 14. She was found with her nightgown wrapped around her face. Some critics point out that several of the subjects in Magritte's paintings are veiled in white sheets as a reference to his mother's suicide. René studied art in Brussels at the Academy of Fine Art. In 1922 he married Georgette Berger, whom he had first met at the age of 13. Soon after getting married, Magritte supported Georgette and himself by painting wallpaper designs and designing posters, devoting only his free time to serious painting. He was profoundly influenced by a painting he saw in 1922, Chirico's "The Song of Love" and his style of painting changed from that point on. His first one-man show was in 1927 and it received harsh criticism. The Magrittes apparently led quite a suburban life, in direct contrast to his paintings which are by turns disturbing, amusing, unconventional and intriguing. Magritte painted in realistic style, with crisp lines and sharp edges. He took familiar objects from everyday life (apples, shoes, bowler hats, birds, clouds) but he positioned these objects in a way that challenged the rational order. His compositions are known for their juxtaposition of common objects, often skewed in scale and placed in incongruous and bizarre settings. René Magritte died of cancer in 1967.

Magritte's Techniques

Magritte used many different techniques in his art. Talk about these terms while looking at examples of his art.

- ~Dislocation: something "out of place" (a train emerging from a fireplace)
- ~Transformation: merging two objects (an object which appears to be a bottle turning into a carrot)
- ~Dramatic Scale Change: objects that are much larger or smaller than real life (a wine glass large enough to fill a room)
- ~Incongruence: something that does not fit with the normal order of things (a ship silhouette filled with ocean)
- ~Replacement: part of objects or figures changing place (figure of an adult woman with the head of a baby holding a baby with the head of a woman)
- ~Levitation: something that floats in space (an apple floats in front of a face)

Surrealism

Surrealism is a movement in art and literature that tried to represent the subconscious mind by creating fantastic imagery and juxtaposing elements that seem to contradict each other. The term surrealism literally means "over-realism." The movement was founded in the 1920s and included not only painters but also spilled over into poetry, music and theater. Surrealists aim to liberate the imagination and the unconscious mind, and celebrate the freedom of the artist from rational thought. Many surrealist works were pure fantasy, reconstructing the world of dreams, hallucination and the grotesque. Magritte disassociated himself from the movement after several ideological disagreements.

The Title

The title of the play is an excellent example of the kind of wit and word play that abounds in This is Not a Pipe Dream. One of Magritte's most well known paintings is a realistic representation of a pipe. Underneath is written "Ceci N'est Pas Une Pipe" (this is not a pipe) illustrating his opinion that his painting is definitely not "the real thing" but merely a painting of a pipe. As pointed out in the play, an apple and a stone are, in reality, very different things, but in art they are the same, just pigment on canvas. Nor is a play "real life" but "the performing artist's living canvas." For this reason, the actor who plays Magritte is always referred to as René and never Magritte "for he is no more Magritte than this pipe is a pipe or a play is real life." Father holds the opinion that René's plan to become an artist is nothing but a pipe dream. A pipe dream is defined in the play as "any fantastic hope or wish that could never be fulfilled." Thus, the title: This Is Not A Pipe Dream. The "play on words" continues throughout the script. Father is told to "pipe down" and later the French pronunciation of pipe (peep) becomes a joke during a scene in which René's father says "not another word, not a peep."

Theater Etiquette

(3AT-R2) It's helpful to review the rules of theater etiquette before seeing a show especially since this may be the first live theater experience for some of your students. Please take a moment to discuss the following pointers prior to seeing the performance.

- ◆ Stay seated during the performance.
- ◆ Be respectful to the performers and other people in the audience by not talking during the performance.
- ◆ Appropriate responses such as applause or laughter are always welcome.
- ◆ Use of cell phones, cameras and any other recording device is not allowed at any time during the performance!

Things To Talk About After Seeing the Play...

*(3AT-R1) All plays have three P's: People in a Place with a Problem. Where does the play take place? Who are the people? What are the problems? What happens at the beginning of the play? The middle? The end?

*René's mother tells him he must always honor his dreams. Talk about what she means by this. What is a good way to honor our dreams?

*René "lost" his mother in the play. What does that mean? Have you ever lost someone or something you cared very much about? How did it make you feel?

Arts and Language Arts Activities to Try After Seeing the Play...

Creative Drama

(1AT-R3, 1AT-F1):

*In the play, René's mother and father have different ideas about the subject of his art lessons. In pairs, play out a scene between his parents in which they discuss whether or not René will be allowed to have lessons. Decide who wins the argument and why. Share with the class and discuss your discoveries.

*In groups of 3 or 4, create a realistic scene using a combination of ordinary objects that would not normally be connected (apple, clock, bowler hat, and tuba, for example). Come up with a list of objects by having each student write down one idea on a piece of paper. Put all of the pieces of paper into a hat and have each group pick four. The group must come up with a scene that incorporates all 4 objects in some way (using pantomime and dialogue), has a beginning, middle and end and as well as people, in a place, with a problem (character, setting, conflict). Share the scenes with the class.

Surreal Collages

(1AV-R4, 1AV-F2): Now that you looked at some of Magritte's artwork and know about the techniques he used (on previous page), try and incorporate at least 2 of those techniques into this project. Use magazine cuttings or printed images from the internet to create your own collage in the style of Magritte! Give your art a title, describe what you've created to the class and display in your school.

Dream Journals (Strand 2, Concepts 3& 4):

Remembering our dreams can be difficult at times. It's best to try and write them down right when you wake up because they are fresh in your mind. Sometimes something will happen during the day that triggers a memory. Keep your journal close so you can write dreams down as you remember them. Keep track of your dreams every day for a week (or more). In addition to entries about actual dreams, write entries about the dreams you have for yourself, your life, your family, or the world! Focus on finding your own voice and using descriptive language to help your reader "see" your ideas.

Dream Illustrations (1AV-R2):

The dreams we have when we're asleep tend to be very surreal. Now that you have some dreams written down in your journal, choose one that you can illustrate. Use crayons, markers, or colored pencils to create a picture of your dream. Focus on communicating thoughts, ideas and feelings. Give it a title and share with the class. Create a Dream Gallery in your classroom or school.

The Exquisite Corpse:

This technique or game used by Surrealists is a method by which a collection of words or images is collectively assembled, the result being known as the "exquisite corpse." You can always change the title if you find it too morbid! This is how it works:

The Writing Version-

Start off by creating an interesting sentence or theme (like "the dark sky hung over us" or "Peace"). Divide into groups of four. Fold a piece of paper into four sections. One at a time, write down a sentence that connects to the sentence or theme you have chosen, making sure the next person doesn't see what has already been written. Unfold the paper and have one person from the group read it aloud to the class.

The Drawing Version-

Decide on what you will draw (a body, monster, building or a free-form drawing in response to a word or theme). Fold a piece of paper into four sections. The first person draws on the top section, extending the lines just over the fold; the next person draws on the second section extending the lines just over the fold and so on. If you are drawing a body, for example, you might want to suggest dividing the body into four sections. Unfold and analyze. Hang around the class.

The Evolution of Art During Magritte's Career

René Magritte started painting in the 1920s and continued into the 1960s. Styles of art, music, theater and dance went through a huge evolution during the 20th century. Divide the class into 5 groups and assign each group a decade (1920's-1960s) to research what was happening in art, music, theater and dance during their assigned period. It can be as simple as finding an example from each area or as complex as adding fashion and cultural trends. Encourage the use of pictures, drawings, recordings, demonstration and props for a final presentation to the class. Divide a wall in your classroom into 5 sections so each decade can be represented in a display. You may even want to add historical events in a timeline format.

Childsplay's Student Activity Guide for This is Not A Pipe Dream

Today you saw a production of This is Not A Pipe Dream performed by Childsplay. Here are some things to talk about and some activities to do now that you've seen the show!

Tell your family and/or friends about the play!

◇ Tell them about the story and the characters: What happens in the beginning, the middle and the end of the play? How many characters can you remember? Which character was your favorite and why? What were some of the things the characters did? What was your favorite part of the play?

◇ Tell them about the costumes, scenery, props, and music that were used in the production. Draw pictures to help describe the different costumes and scenery.

◇ Tell them about René's dream to become a painter. René's mother tells him to always honor his dreams. What does she mean? What are your dreams? Has anyone ever discouraged you from going after your dreams? Is there someone who encourages you to go after your dreams?

Pipe Dream Drawings~

A pipe dream is defined in the play as "any fantastic hope or wish that could never be fulfilled." So that means it's an unrealistic goal or something that probably could never happen. It's still fun to daydream about our "pipe dreams." What is your "pipe dream?" Write down a sentence describing your pipe dream and then draw a picture that illustrates it!
